

Morality is essentially a subjective opinion of what is right or wrong. Even in this country where the government, media, and society governs the way we think about right and wrong, there are many people who break the law, commit crimes, and do other "immoral" things. When there are differences between the standard morals and the actions of people, it becomes evident that morality is continuously changing and can simultaneously be different within different sects of humanity.